You don't need children to understand that good public schools support the value of homes in their neighborhood. And while higher quality schools tend to be accompanied by higher property taxes, homeowners in such areas end up being paid for by a higher house sale price. Getting paid sounds great, but how much do we talk about? A new study from Realtor.com shows that to enter a desirable school district, 9% of shoppers say they will pay between 11% and 20% above budget. Separately, 17% say they will pay extra to be close enough for their children to go to and from school. Related: 7 Repair Tips to Increase Resale Value
In a showdown between adult amenities and education for children, you guessed it: kids are winning. Realtor.com that 62% of buyers would go to the spa house if that meant getting into the right school district. 50% will give up easy access to shops, while 44% will give a place in the form of a bonus room. If the house you are planning to sell is in a very desirable school district, do everything in your power to emphasize this fact in all your real estate marketing materials. Many potential buyers are parents of children currently in the school system, so be sure to get the word out among neighbors and local friends. If you're buying a home, use a search tool that lets you filter through the school district, as the boundaries of the district don't always match the city, village, and city lines. After all, you can't assume that your kids will be assigned to attend the same school as the kids down the block or even next door. H. Armstrong Roberts/ClassicStock/ArchivePhotos/Getty Images
To find a school district associated with any home address in the United States, go to GreatSchools.org, and enter an address in the school district's interactive and boundary maps. Then, find the name of the school district to get the district's phone number, and call the district to confirm. After GreatSchools.org to get the name of the area, visit the area's website. Many public school districts have interactive school search apps that allow families to enter their home address and get a list of appropriate elementary, secondary and secondary schools. At least most of them have maps showing the boundaries of the district. It's helpful to take this step because school district attendance districts can vary from year to year, so information from neighbors, realtors and other local sources may not be accurate. In addition, most state education departments carry lists of each district in the state organized in alphabetical order by name, or numerically by district number, and often have maps showing boundaries for each district. Here you can also find District, average test scores, school rankings and other useful information. As a final confirmation step, call the school district office and ask to speak to an enrollment specialist who will help find the appropriate school for child in the family.
